"Where the rigs have gone idle of late is interesting because the changes fly in the face of what has happened in the commodities markets," said S&P Global Platts senior industry analystTrey Cowan. "For example, it was rigs drilling for oil that showed some weakness during the past month, despite prices for West Texas Intermediate crude oil having generally improved. Conversely, we saw a pickup in natural gas rigs juxtaposed against weakening natural gas prices."

Looking ahead, Cowan said: "Over the coming winter we would not be surprised to see a continued seasonal flattening of rig activity as the holidays and the exhausting of yearly capital budgets tend to take a toll."
